- 1. Although it was decided late in 1951 by the Political Commission of the Partido Vanguardia Popular that Manuel Mora Valverde, president of the Vanguardia, should attend the World Economic Conference in Moscow as least lican delegate, it now appears most unlikely. According to source, subsequent to making a decision, the Political Commission learned that the Costa Rican Communist Party would have to bear all expenses for the trip. This development has made it practically impossible for the Vanguardia to participate in the conference.
- 2. In view of the almost desperate financial situation of the Party in Costa Rica, it is almost a certainty that Costa Rica will not be represented in Moscow. However, in the event that funds should become available for the specific purpose of sending a Costa Rican delegate, Manuel Mora would be the logical person to go.
